Critical History of Modern Architecture

3 credits

Introduction:

This course provides a survey of the critical history of modern architecture. It demonstrates the sharp conflicts between tradition and modernity, the divergence between the modern and postmodern in the 20th century, and enlightens the hope for 21st-century architecture from a critical historical perspective. In the first half of the course, the lectures start from the issue of ornament in the transition from the classic to the modern, introduce Adolf Loos' radical theoretical shift from "ornament" to "space," identify the rise of American modern architecture through Sullivan and FL Wright's practice, present theoretical manifestos of multiple avant garde groups during the 1920s-30s, analyze the influence of Bauhaus to modern architectural education and its relationship to German modernism and the International Style, and use Le Corbusier as a case study to reveal the philosophical change of his mind within the context of thriving modernism. In the second half of the course, the lectures highlight the dominance of rational design in modern architecture regarding the representation of ideology, efficient forms based on functions, structural and environmental technologies, monumental materiality, and pristine fundamental forms for autonomous expression. The lectures then introduce the critical regionalism and the 1980s postmodernism as a resistance towards the technically based homogenous International Style, and further reveal how the 1990s Deconstructivism and phenomenological architecture show contrastive attitudes of history but share the desire for poetical depth to resist the cynical historicism of postmodernism. The lectures end with the topic of urbanism to emphasize that cities have seriously challenged architectural imagination throughout the 20th century and will continuously do so in the contemporary age.

The majority of the class time will be utilized by lectures and the slide and video presentations, but questions are encouraged. The in-class instruction has its own structure, which does not follow verbatim the chapters of the textbook. The notes from the class are crucial for students to utilize the instruction provided. The slides shown in each lecture are highly selective and are closely related to the lecture topic. After each lecture, students need to read the corresponding chapter(s) of the textbook and other selected references to deepen their understandings of the related building images and embodied ideas.

Students will be graded through two short papers and periodic attendance check. Each paper explores a topic selected by the student from a different half of the lecture series. A detailed outline of the paper assignment will be provided in class.

Class Regulations:

Constant preparation, attendance, participation and interest are expected. Keeping a quiet class environment is important for the success of the whole class. No eating food, use of cell phones (including the ringing of phones) or chattering will be tolerated in the classroom. In addition, you are expected to be in the classroom on time and remain in the classroom until the completion of the lecture. You are responsible for your own class attendance. The dates of the paper submissions are clearly marked in the syllabus, and no late submission will be accepted.

Email Policy:

For email security, all email communication to the instructor should go through the UF gatorlink accounts. Email can be used for quick and simple communication on a certain issue related to the course but cannot be used as the replacement for face-to-face discussions with the instructor and, most importantly, the class attendance.

Images:

The slideshows in the lectures will be organized in accordance with each lecture topic. These slides are carefully selected and arranged based on the instructor's research and will not be accessible after the lecture. The students will also need to review the building images in the textbook, selected references, and rich online sources on modern architecture. Importantly, true understanding of building images should be established through a student's devoted learning, research and contemplation for embodied historical meanings.

Grading:

1) Paper 1: 35% (covering a topic of weeks 2-8);

2) Paper 2: 35% (covering a topic of weeks 9-14);

3) Attendance: 30% (periodic check)
