Course Description:

This course offers an overview of selected important topics in urban economics. Urban economics, as a discipline lies at the intersection of geography and economics. At a general level, urban economics brings space into economic considerations. Urban economics puts economics and geography together, exploring the geographical or location choices of utility-maximizing households and profit-maximizing firms. Urban economics also identifies inefficiencies in location choices and examines alternative public policies to promote efficient choices

Primarily, this course will address following questions. Why do cities exist? Why cities differ from each other in size, structure, and other characteristics? What makes some of the cities grow exponentially? How do firms and individual decide where to locate? Why do firms cluster in urban locations? How price of land is determined and how it varies across space? What causes urban problems such as poverty, crime, housing, transportation, and pollution? How urban government addresses the above mentioned issues? This course will be applied in nature and will take an interdisciplinary approach.

Course Objectives:

- Evaluate urban problems.
- Explain why cities differ from each other in size, structure, and other characteristics.
