Course Description

This course explores the social, cultural and material developments which shape the historical design trends and construction technology of the American built environment, with a focus on 20th century American-built heritage resources. By examining historic construction methods and the behavior of building materials and systems, participants will gain experience with; identifying typical material pathologies, applying a methodology for assessments, selecting an appropriate treatment approach (Preservation, Rehabilitation, Restoration, as defined in The Secretary of the Interior's Standards and Guidelines), and understanding strategies for the technical requirements of treating building materials and systems. The study of applied preservation methods for historic structures and materials is supported through work in the UF Preservation Institute St. Augustine Envision Lab.

Course Objectives

- Identify key features of major design movements of the 20th century, with a focus on the post-war period from 1945-1975 in America, and the regional adaptations found in Florida.
- Apply knowledge of the process and methodology for researching 20th-century architectural trends, types or themes, and for situating the architectural trend, type or theme within local, regional, national, and global contexts.
- Apply the evidence of historic construction techniques and recent interventions to synthesize development histories of 20^c-century structures.
- Understand and identify pathologies for historic building systems and materials.
- Apply the various treatment approaches (SIS) and levels of interventions for 20th-century historic buildings and sites
- Technical responses to the emerging issues of sustainability and resiliency
- Apply best practices of preserving built heritage for interventions in historic buildings, structures and sites.
